

SURIMI INDUSTRY IN THE SOUTHEAST ASIAN COUNTRIES

According to rapid growth of surimi industry in Southeast Asian countries, as well as depletion of fisheries resources especially demersal resources, reduction of raw materials may impact to the demand of surimi producers. Therefore under the Asian-SEAFDEC program SEAFDEC/TD proposed to conduct the information collection of economically important species as surimi raw materials in the Southeast Asian.

The program was started from 2005 by collecting all information concerns in cooperation with the local fisheries agency and fishery private sectors. Field trip to observe and interview the surimi producers were also performed such as in Thailand, Indonesia, Vietnam and Myanmar. Information from Malaysia mostly based on the questionnaires in cooperation with DOF/Malaysia.

In this study, the attempt is not only to show the quantity of surimi products in the region, but the linkage between surimi products and raw materials used in each country in comparison with the status of fisheries resources in the region will also analyzed.

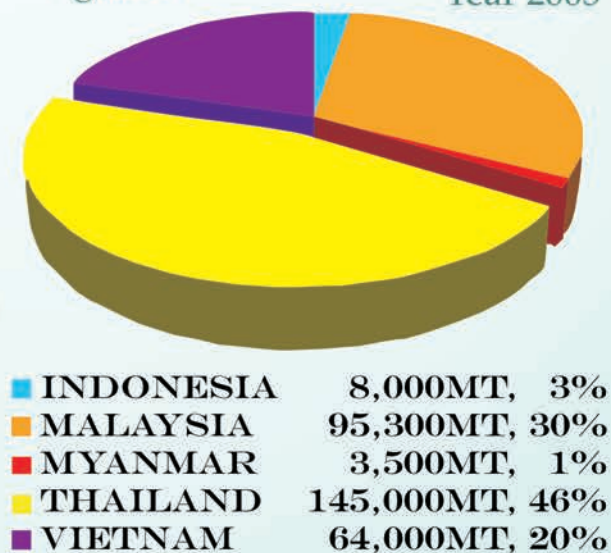

STATUS

The surimi production in the Southeast Asian Countries namely Thailand, Malaysia, Vietnam, Myanmar and Indonesia is primarily based on the demersal species such as Threadfin bream (Nemipterus spp.), Bigeye (Priacanthus spp.) and Lizardfish (Saurida spp.), because they are the most abundant raw materials found in the region and due to their meat characteristics that proper for processing export-quality surimi. Only in Malaysia, Barracuda seem to be one of the main raw materials.

Overall surimi products in the Southeast Asian Region in 2005 are estimated 315,800MT. Figure 1 shows the percentage of surimi products in Southeast Asian Countries in 2005. It is found that largest surimi producers is Thailand and follow by Malaysia and Vietnam where as the amount of surimi products are 145,000MT, 95,300MT and 64,000MT, respectively. (Figure 1)

Location of Surimi plants are mostly near the fishing ground of trawler. (Figure 2)
